Chist-ERA	2015-EoI		Secure Cloud Access Infrastructure	We propose a new cloud management concept addressing the most critical issues in cloud computing namely security and privacy including integrated identity management. The proposed novel technologies provide efficient data compression-encryption where a unique symmetric key is automatically generated as an integral part of the compression step and is dependent on the characteristics of the data. The novel compression methods have been developed within Sheffield Hallam University addressing user-centric security, privacy and trust issues in the Internet of Things by providing secure, massive reduction in storage requirements and bandwidth while preventing unauthorized access to the	http://www.chistera.eu/call-2015-eoi	Sheffield Hallam University

In order to ensure portability and interoperability of cloud provision with adequate quality of service the technologies are standardized within a global framework of cloud deployment based on OpenStack. The project is driven by end user and cloud provider needs and further enhanced by an integrated multiple way authentication method making use of PKI-Public Key Infrastructure enabling the implementation of a secure information-sharing cloud environment.
